Clean sweep for Frontier Silicon powered devices at What Hi-Fi Radio Awards

Devices based on Frontier Silicon technology swept the board in the radio category of the What Hi-Fi Awards on Monday 13th October 2014.

The What Hi-Fi radio product of the year is the Roberts Stream 93i, DAB/FM internet radio with Spotify Connect, which topped the '£100-£200' category. The receiver was commended for its superb sound and genuinely useful extras.

The 2014 radio best buy was awarded to the Pure Evoke D2, portable DAB/FM radio, from the 'Up to £100' category. The judges commented that "Its detailed sound, fine build and low price make it superb value for money".

The final award in the 'Over £200' category went to the Revo SuperConnect, DAB/FM internet radio with Bluetooth connectivity and Spotify Connect. The Revo SuperConnect simply, in the words of the judges, "has it all".

Prem Rajalingham, Vice President of Sales and Marketing, said: "The What Hi-Fi Awards set the benchmark for high quality audio experience. We are delighted to work with brands who expect the highest standards in terms of quality and reliability. These three awards are testimony to the fact that Frontier Silicon delivers on both measures."

Paul Smith, General Manager of PURE said: "Our partnership with Frontier Silicon extends over many years. Together, we have worked on numerous projects to deliver ground-breaking audio solutions. We are pleased that once again this relationship is being recognised by the What Hi-Fi Awards."

Owen Watters, CEO of Roberts said: "At Roberts, our mission is consistently to enhance the listening experience of our customers – with products that are innovative and stand the test of time. In Frontier, we have a technology partner who helps us achieve these goals."

David Baxter, CEO of Revo said: "We have worked with Frontier Silicon for ten years – our aim is to deliver high-quality, leading-edge, connected audio devices. With the Revo Superconnect, we have once again delivered against this objective – our thanks to Frontier for helping to make this possible."
