

Richter Audio does Digital Radio

Richter, an award-winning Australian loudspeaker brand established in 1986, has added digital radio to its product range.

Australian-owned Richter Audio will launch its Digital Essentials Radio range in July, followed by a Smart Audio Digital Radio range later in the year.

Digital Essential Radios deliver quality, design and performance and provide an affordable entry into the Digital Radio DAB+ market segment. Radio is a big part of people's lives and, now that so many digital-only radio services are catering for different genres, Richter is set to play an important role in this exciting audio category.

The CORE Digital Radio is finished in cool grey with stylish platinum grey metallic foil. It has a display for easy selection of your favourite digital stations as well as scrolling text, time and date. There is a headphone socket for personal listening and it runs on mains or battery power. The CORE uses the latest digital module for improved performance.

With the WAKE Digital Alarm Clock Radio you can start your day with your favourite digital radio station. Designed to complement its surroundings, the Wake is available in black or with a warm walnut finish. Easy to use, it has a generous 3.2" display and clearly laid out control panel with a large dial for volume and menu selection. Bluetooth with NFC tap and pair allows you to stream your own music from a compatible smart device and you can also fast-charge your smart device from the USB output.

Launching in July, the Richter Digital Essential Radios are priced from $74.98 to $159 and will be available from Harvey Norman stores and selected Richter Specialist retailers.
